Celtic Thalasso Therapy

Algae - 1 kg algae comprise the active substances contained in around 100,000 l marine water, including all important minerals, amino acids, trace elements, vitamins and polyphenols (antioxidants).

The individual content of these different active substances depends on the relevant type of algae. Depending on their rate of growth, the various species, which number almost 20,000, are subdivided into macro- and micro-algae. They are subdivided again into brown, red and green algae on the basis of their coloration.

Hot Chocolate Indulgence

Chocolate enhances our general well-being.

The psychoactive substance contained in cocoa, phenyl ethylamine, is responsible for this. This stimulates the secretion of the body's own pick-me-up, dopamine, in the brain.

At the same time, cocoa also supplies polyphenols, which protect the vessels, making cocoa a genuine skin protection factor in the battle against oxidative stress.

hydragogic and anti-care.

Asian Green Tea Health Wrap

Green Tea "pure" elixir of life. No wonder, because its active substance diversity is revealed in its calcium, iron, fluoride, potassium, magnesium, sodium, phosphor, zinc and vitamin content.

An active substance cocktail which delays the aging process strengthens the immune system and additionally acts to combat free radicals.

The tea's own aroma provides instant well-being.

Exotic Fruit Moisture Plunge

Citrus - Vitamin C is not all that makes citrus fruits so indispensable. Nevertheless, they have such a high vitamin C content that one to two lemons or two to three oranges are sufficient to cover an adult's vitamin C requirements.

At the same time, citrus fruits contain a healthy portion of vitamin B - which is important for blood formation and the metabolism - plus valuable minerals such as potassium and calcium. Potassium lowers the blood sugar level and promotes cell growth. Calcium ensures strong bones, healthy teeth and taut skin. The flavonoid content is also an Spices - Exotic spices such as ginger, pepper and cinnamon are able to stimulate pheromone production.

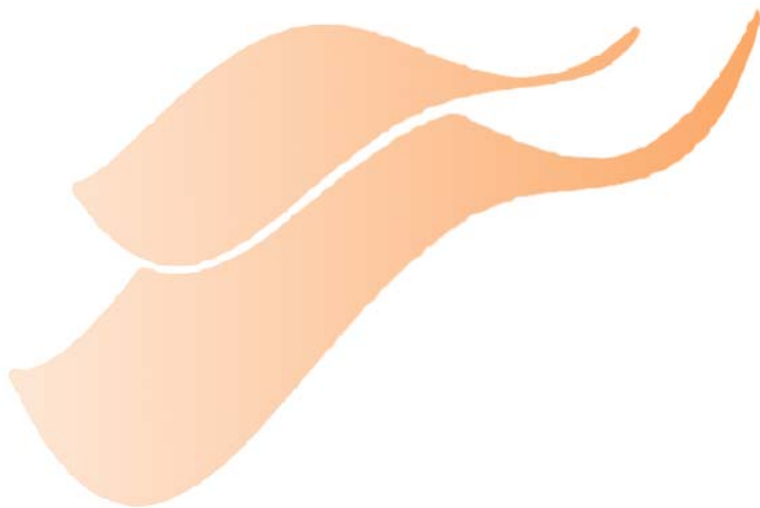

Pheromones are our body's natural signal and erotic attractant substances, which characterize a person's individual radiance and appeal.

Chemical messenger substances, so-called neurotransmitters, are also activated. These stimulate the body and mind, mobilizing reserves of strength to engender a positive attitude towards life.

The Cool Beauty from the North

Cranberry - The less well-known relative of the comparatively smaller cranberry is the mossberry or American cranberry (Lat. Vaccinium macrocarpon). The North American Indian used them to dye blankets and headdresses, but also to treat arrow wounds and to enhance the taste of meat. Whether consciously or unconsciously – this indigenous people also protected itself against bacterial infections, long before the discovery of antibiotics.

The antimicrobial effect has since been proved: Bacteria are rendered harmless by proanthocyan (condensed tannins), a substance contained in moss berries. Moss berries also contain sodium, phosphor and a high content of potassium and vitamin C, making their anti-oxidative and "rejuvenation" effect so remarkable.

Wine Connoisseur's Choice

Grape - Grape seeds are genuine power packs.

As a radical interceptor, the antioxidant which they contain, procyanidin (also called oligo-meric proanthocyanidin, abbreviated to OPC), is 50 times more potent than vitamin E and 18 times more powerful than vitamin C. This means that active cell protection is achieved and sustained skin rejuvenation is aided. The polyphenol content is a further, special feature.

In strengthening the immune system, this extensively combats premature skin aging.
